GIVEN 5 TO 10 YEARS IN EASTERN "PEN" ON ARSON CHARGE

Owen Austin, 37, Sellersville, Held Menace To The Public

HE PLEADED GUILTY

Was Arrested by County Fire Marshal Stackhouse And State Police

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 28—Judge Calvin S. Boyer yesterday sentenced Owen Austin, 37, of Sellersville, to serve from five to ten years in the Eastern State Penitentiary on a charge of arson.

Austin was arrested a week ago by County Fire Marshal William L. Stackhouse and State Police, as the person who started two fires in the million dollar plant of the United States Gange Company at Sellersville. Austin worked as a laborer in the plant for the past sixteen years.

Austin pleaded guilty to the charge and said that everything that the police read in the signed confession made by him, was true. He told Judge Boyer that the reason he started a fire in the plant at 3 o'clock on the morning of November 17th was because he had a grudge against two men who worked there.

Although Austin was discharged from the army during the World War after serving four months—because of mental deficiency—he told a straightforward story yesterday. He told Judge Boyer that the paymaster of the plant, Leroy Steckel, and John Fossbender, tax collector of Sellersville, who also works at the plant, took money out of his pay envelope to pay back taxes that he owed in Sellersville and that this policy made him mad.

Austin said that he earned about $13 a week and that one week they took $10 out of his pay envelope and that left him not enough money to pay his board. Altogether, he said they took nearly $40 from him.

Austin admitted that several years ago he set fire to a grandstand in Menlo Park and on another occasion turned in a false fire alarm. He served two years in Pennsylvania State Prison, he told the Court, but they never gave him any treatment there and he did not like the place.

"The public must be protected," Judge Boyer said in sentencing Austin.

Austin said that he entered the mill early in the morning at a time when the night watchman was not in the particular building where he started the fire. Austin said that he started one fire with some old oily rags and a match and that he then walked to another section of the plant and placed some papers near a bucket of gasoline and set fire to the papers. He said that he then realized what he was doing and extinguished the second fire, but by that time, he said, the first fire had spread too much for him to extinguish it and damage to the extent of about $200 was done. The automatic extinguishers in the plant saved what would have been a disastrous loss.

CONSIDER NEW ROAD TO FEED SUPER-HIGHWAY

Will Make Easy Travel To Upper End of Bucks County

SURVEY HAS BEEN MADE

LANGHORNE, Nov. 28—A new road is being considered here. The streets will be used as a feed line to the new express highway and will start at Midway, about two miles north of Bristol and tie in with the new road. The route will be in a line with Durham Road, which now is the only means of reaching Bristol and its suburbs from here and Newtown. The road has a high crown and is too narrow for the heavy traffic which will be forced to it when the new highway is completed.

Engineers have been busy surveying the route that the road will take and have left markers along properties from which land will be used. The road will cross the old Trenton to Philadelphia Road below the present Lincoln Highway and terminate at the super highway. It will be about four miles in length and will open up a new and speedier means of travel between Bristol and the upper end of the county.

Land damages will be slight as the road passes through what is now used as farm land below the Lincoln Highway. After crossing the highway the damages will be slightly more. Pine street, which is now unimproved in Langhorne Manor, will be widened slightly to care for the road and this expense will also be reasonable, it is expected.

The road is expected to tunnel the Reading-New York Division about three blocks east of the present grade crossing which carries Durham Road over the four tracks.

This will eliminate long stops by motorists due to the passing of numerous trains. Due to an old land agreement which the Reading Company made some years ago when the Trenton to Philadelphia route was built, the grade crossing must remain.

POLICE INVESTIGATE

MORRISVILLE, Nov. 28—Morrisville police are investigating a robbery which occurred at the home of Fred Howell, 171 West Maple avenue. The thieves forced their way into the home while the family was away, and stole jewelry valued at $125.

Officer Joseph Lebergren was notified at the time the family returned, but after a thorough search of the neighborhood could find no trace of the robbers.

TREVOSE CAMP PROPRIETRESS BELIEVES MAN, WOMAN AND THREE CHILDREN FOUND DEAD WERE GUESTS AT CAMP

Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin Dill Leave With State Trooper For Carlisle, Where They Will View Bodies of Children and Also Man and Woman — Wash Cloth Leads To Identification.

Communication has been received from Frederick J. Templeton, district attorney of Cumberland County, by County Superintendent of Schools Hoffman at Doylestown, requesting that the teachers of Bucks County schools report any children missing from classes in an endeavor to identify the three children found murdered last Saturday morning in the woods of South Mountains, outside of Carlisle.

Efforts to identify the three children found dead Saturday on South Mountain near Carlisle shifted to this area last night, when information was given to the Pennsylvania State Police at Morrisville that it was thought the three children and a man and a woman had stopped at a tourist camp along the Lincoln Highway near Trevo.

State police at Morrisville became exceedingly active and early today a trooper and the proprietor of the tourist camp and his wife drove to Harrisburg where an effort will be made to identify the youngsters.

According to Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin Dill, proprietors of the camp which is located along the new Lincoln Highway opposite the Memorial Park Cemetery, near Street Road, the three children accompanied by a man and a woman spent Monday night, November 19th, and Tuesday night, November 20th, in one of their cabins.

According to the story which Mrs. Dill told to Trooper Brace, a man, a woman and their three children—the latter answering the exact description of the dead children, and closely resembling their published photographs—applied at the Dill camp for tourist accommodations on Monday evening, November 19.

Mrs. Dill said that the adults were "very distant," and did not appear desirous of talking about themselves or of fraternizing. The three children were put to bed almost immediately, and then the adults, who gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Malone, Vallejo, Cal., left in their automobile, stating that they were going to Philadelphia.

Mrs. Dill said that the party was traveling in a 1929 Pontiac sedan, painted black, that it bore California license plates, and that the first numerals on the tags were "611-C."

On Tuesday the children did not arise until after 9 o'clock, she informed Brace, and retired early. Their supposed parents again left in the evening in their automobile, saying that they were going to Philadelphia.

About 10 o'clock on Wednesday morning they left. Mrs. Dill went to the cabin to prepare it for other patrons, and found a bundle of papers and clothing on a floor.

It fell open as she was removing it, and was found to include a man's blue broadcloth shirt, a man's gray trousers, a woman's red skirt, a towel, a wash-rag and a pair of woman's well-worn silk knickers.

Mr. and Mrs. "Malone" were described as follows: The former, 28 years of age, 5 feet 6 inches in height, 130 pounds, dark hair, slender and wearing glasses. The latter: 22 years of age, 5 feet 4 inches, 130 pounds, chestnut hair, dark complexioned.

The two descriptions, though general, are amazingly accurate delineations of the two dead persons found at Spring Meadow Station.

The bundle of clothing found by Mrs. Dill, when described to police at Harrisburg, immediately provoked interest.

In the first place, the wash-rag was described as a square white bit of cloth, barred by two blue lines intersecting to form nine equal squares. On the margin was a black "X" stitched in thread.

A wash-rag identical in design bearing the same black "X," but intersected by pink lines, was found near the site of the finding of the three children's bodies on South Mountain, and is an important element in the jumbled skein of evidence.

Secondly, a woman's red skirt was found in a black handbag which was found by searchers near where the children's body lay. It contained clothing which was found to have checked exactly with articles of clothing on the three bodies. It also contained a woman's red skirt.

Mrs. Dill's report of the Philadelphia visits of Mr. and Mrs. Malone opens the door to the identification of the two Philadelphia motion picture theatre stubs found on the person of the dead woman near Altoona, not previously accounted for.

Her testimony was regarded of such importance that Major Wilhelm directed the immediate dispatch of a message over the State Police teletype, and its telephonic communication to other States throughout the country, describing the automobile in which the group traveled, and asking for the detention of the occupants of such car, if located.

The message requested that all highways be watched, and that all garages, parking lots and other likely storage places be searched.

Mrs. Dill told her story to Trooper Thomas Brace, of the Morrisville substation of the State police.

Shortly afterward, State Police requested Mr. and Mrs. Dill to leave their home and to spend the night in an undisclosed hotel in Philadelphia. This led to the garbled report that a woman in Philadelphia was under arrest, which proved not to be the case.

Meanwhile as the arrival of those witnesses was awaited here, the authorities made public a chronological table of the known movements of the supposed family during their last week alive. It follows:

Nov. 17, 9 p. m., Waynesboro, Pa. A man, woman and three young girls appeal for lodging at the Petrie Boarding House, offering seventy-five cents for a place to sleep. The man says he is J. C. Cowdin but gives no address. Turned down, they drive away in a black 1929 model sedan bearing California license plates, assertedly intending to push on to Philadelphia in quest of work.

Nov. 17, Gettysburg, Pa.: Twenty miles northeast, a man, a woman and three girls in a 1929 black sedan, obtain lodging with a Mrs. Snyder. The name J. C. Vallejo, Cal., is given.

Nov. 18, Philadelphia, 250 miles eastward: A man, a woman and three girls are fed by a restaurant proprietor at reduced prices because they said they were short of money.

Nov. 19, Philadelphia: the same group is given breakfast and a man, a woman and three girls check in later in the day at the tourist camp of Mrs. Goodwin Dill, near Trevo, giving the name of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Malone, Vallejo, Cal., and driving a 1929 black sedan.

Nov. 20, the man and woman leave the children with Mrs. Dill and visit Philadelphia to go to a movie.

Nov. 21, Trevo: The party drives away in an unattended direction.

Nov. 22, 9 a. m.: John Naugle, a farmer, discovered a discarded black suit-case filled with numerous girls' dresses and several articles of wearing apparel for a man and a woman.

The bag has since been definitely linked to the girls through buttons and a belt it contained, which were missing from their coats.

Nov. 22, Altoona, Pa.: 250 miles westward, 9 p. m.: a man and woman obtain lodging at an inexpensive boarding house, registering as Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Gardner, of Philadelphia.

Nov. 23: They leave the boarding house.

Nov. 24, Duncansville, 10 miles northwest, 9 a. m.: They are found dead in the Spring Meadow flag station of the Pennsylvania Railroad—shot to death.

Nov. 24, Carlisle, Pa., 9.30 a. m.: the huddled forms of three sisters are found by wood choppers on bleak South Mountain 3 miles east of where the bag was discovered—the beginning of an incredible mystery which, after hundreds of tips have been run down, hinges for solution now solely upon the supposition that coincidences will be proved to be facts.

Descriptions of the still nameless children who apparently met their deaths Thursday, tally with "remarkable definiteness" to the description given by Mrs. Dill of the three girls in the party at her camp earlier in the week.

THANKSGIVING

The Thanksgiving season is a good time for taking stock of one's self.

Each of us doubtless has much to be thankful for. Health, happiness and prosperity have been with most of us. Fortune has been kind—if you believe that Fortune accomplishes these things—but, whatever the reason, most of us are better off today than we were a year ago.

We still have our health, that priceless possession without which no joys are real and with which even misfortune is tempered.

We still have our friends—and real friends are among the most precious possessions in the world, for they stand by us at all times, tempering our sorrows in time of adversity and encouraging us on in time of success. The man without friends is poor, indeed.

We still have our happiness—and that, in its many forms, is really what makes life worth while. There are many, perhaps mistaking mere financial success, wealth and position for true happiness, who have gained these but lost their happiness entirely.

Yes, we—certainly the most of us—have reason to be thankful.

But have we the right to be thankful?

The answer can be found if one will only consider himself for a moment. The decision is one's own, and the judge is one's conscience. No other judge is needed.

Have we been as considerate of our health as it has been kind to us? Have we been fair to our minds and our bodies, or have we placed an unnecessary burden upon them by neglect, indifference and perhaps occasional dissipation?

Have we been as true to our friends as they have been to us? Have we comforted and aided them in times of adversity as they have comforted and aided us?

Have we confused happiness with those gaudier, tinselled pleasures of life that are so often mistaken for real happiness? Have we realized that true happiness is measured—unconsciously, perhaps, but nevertheless inflexibly—by our return on the good we have done to others?

These are the questions that we must answer for ourselves. No one else can answer them for us, no one else needs to. Each man knows the truth that lies buried within his own heart.

If we have done all these things, then we have really earned the right to be thankful.

Three cent stamps are here to stay indefinitely, says Postmaster General Farley who feels that the average business man, the farmer, the laborer and the professional man would rather pay the extra cent that impose an additional burden upon "the taxpayer." Who d'you mean, taxpayer, Jim?

The co-eds of the University of Indiana have been rated as smarter than the male students, a development which supports the suspicions of the co-eds.

Hollywood plans to produce more pictures featuring music and dancing—now that everyone is pretty well agreed on the plot.

"BEACH BEAUTY" by ARTHUR SHUMWAY

SYNOPSIS

After Earl Harrow, theatrical producer, attends a Community Players' amateur show and sees Kay Owen, the star and local beauty, he decides to prolong his visit to Daytona Beach. He offers her a job as his typist during his stay. Kay, feeling that this may give her an opportunity to get on the professional stage, is thrilled. Following a party at Ida Campbell's, socialite member of the Players, Ida and Harrow become interested in each other to Kay's disappointment. Citing the producer's reputation, Kay's mother and brother, Bud, urge her not to work for him. Then Bud is taken ill. Kay secretly accepts Harrow's offer to help her family. Pete Ryan, young engineering student working as a life-guard, is in love with Kay. He receives an offer of an engineering job in Guatemala and asks Kay to marry him. Kay, uncertain of her love for Pete, refuses. Unknown to her mother, Kay goes on a fishing trip with Harrow. She is surprised when Ida comes aboard for she and "Spike" Winch, Harrow's press agent, had purposely refrained from mentioning the trip to Ida.

CHAPTER XIII

"Won't you join us at breakfast, Ida?" Harrow asked.
"Why, I would like a little coffee, that's you. I didn't stop to eat."
"None of us did," Kay said.
"Isn't Pete coming?" Ida asked.
Harrow looked quizzically from one girl to the other, not realizing Kay could see his expression.
"No, he wasn't able to make it," Kay said. "He'll be busy today about a job."
"Oh, is he leaving the beach?"
"He's leaving the country," Kay said.
Harrow looked at her curiously.
"He is?" Ida asked.
Kay nodded. "He's going to Guatemala."
"Wonderful country," Harrow commented. "I was there in 1928. Had a grand time."
That started Ida and Harrow discussing their travels.
Gradually, Kay was beginning to drift farther and farther away from them. She wondered if they were conscious of the fact that she was sitting at the table with them. This talk of foreign cities and celebrities was Ida's opportunity; she had traveled and met people.

While they were finishing their coffee the Commander III began to move away from the dock out toward the river channel and in a few minutes they were headed south, making good smooth speed on the calm water. They had passed through the Port Orange Bridge below Daytona Beach before they went up on deck.
They watched the sun rise out of the ocean and appear over the narrow peninsula on their left, they watched Port Orange and Wilbur drop into the distance, and saw the slim lighthouse grow nearer, and within what seemed a very short time they were at the inlet, and there was a different feeling about the boat as the open ocean began to assert itself, calm though it was. The Commander III headed east, into the rising sun and for several minutes no one spoke, the beauty was so impressive. Behind them the peninsula of Florida was dropping back; ahead was the incredible horizon; beside them the water was changing from the salty green-blue of the shore to an increasingly clear radiant blue to be seen only under southern sun and sky.

"We can go as far as you like, Mr. Harrow," Kay suggested.
"We'll be coming to the snapper banks in a few miles now, or we can go down the coast and away out."

"I'll leave all that to you," Harrow said. "Just now I think I'll go haul Spike out of bed. I hate having him miss this."

When Harrow had gone, Ida Campbell asked, "Found a job yet, Kay?"

"I'm not sure," Kay answered. "I've something that looks promising."

"It mustn't be easy finding work here at this time of the year," Ida observed. "That is, compared with the city where there's so much more to do."

"That will have to wait," Kay said.

Ida smiled. "Dressing up in a little while. I mean, until Earl is on his way back to Havana and ride up with him."

"That would be nice," Kay remarked.

"I think so," Ida said.

"Well," Earl Harrow announced, appearing from behind them.

"Here's our Mr. Winch, alive and conscious before noon. Say hello to the pretty ladies, Spike."

Spike appeared, puffy-eyed, tousled and vague. He had on "the duds, soft slippers and the tea set a suit of purple silk pajamas. He needed a shave.

"Ugh," he grumbled, or something equally brief and convincing. But when he had had his coffee and had broken out his first cigar of the day, Spike was his usual shrewd, humorous self. Kay was grateful for his presence; he kept tension from the air.

The fishing was fairly good. First honors went to Harrow who pulled in a flapping angel fish. Ida hooked a heavy flounder but lost it trying to bring it up. Kay's first was a mackerel, lean, trim, bluish.

Stopping early in the afternoon, the party had cocktails while waiting for a lunch of some of the freshly caught fish. Kay was rather quiet, wondering when she could somewhere behind them. Then Earl Harrow's voice:

"Spike dropped his rod on the deck and ran. Kay followed him. They found Harrow by the rail alone.

"Life preserver. Quick!" Harrow said.

Kay looked down and saw Ida floundering in the water.

"Earl! Kay!—I can't make it!" Ida gasped weakly.

Earl Harrow turned his agonized face to Kay.

"I can't swim," he groaned. "My back! Polo!"

Spike was after a life preserver. A sailor was coming on the run. Ida bobbed up and down in the water which had become rougher during the day. Her clothing seemed to be weighing her down and some-draw Harrow into private conversation about the job. It was a topic she dreaded opening again, especially now that Ida Campbell was along. Kay had counted on being alone with Harrow—that is to say, with Harrow and Spike—on this trip, but as usual here was Ida breaking into her plans. Kay found herself beginning to dislike the arch blonde; formerly she had been merely a little annoyed.

After lunch they went back to the fishing. Spike, leaning close to Kay, and rapidly chewing his stub of a cigar, looked a small fish and had reeled it up into plain sight when a solid, brown body, sinister as a torpedo, moved close to it. Spike was so excited he jerked his rod and his fish flew up out of the water, released from the hook, and flapped down, gratefully, to disappear with incredible speed. Spike looked solemnly at Kay.

"Did you see that thing?" he asked.

Kay turned to him and smiled. They were removed from Harrow and Ida who were at the moment trying the port side.

"Shark, Spike," she said.

"Shark? Did you see him go for that fish of mine? Am I glad that wasn't my log. You wouldn't get me to go into that water for a million."

"If you'll watch, you'll probably see a lot more of them," Kay noted.

"They say, you know, that they don't attack you. I've grown up down here and I've never seen anyone bitten by one yet. A barracuda, yes—they're worse farther south, down around Miami—but not a shark in these waters. Still, there's always a first time, and they are equipped for the job."

"And how they are!" Spike exclaimed, his voice low with awe.

"Why that looked like a submarine with teeth!"

"Just watch," Kay said, "and you'll see more of them around. That one probably was after your fish all right."

"And if it comes to an argument, he can have the fish," Spike conceded. "What would you do if you hooked one of those whales?"

"Bring him in. It wouldn't be the first shark I've caught."

"You've caught sharks?"

"Plenty of them. Never as big as that, though."

the centuries, ale was the drink of emperors and soldiers, of peasants and serfs, of truck-driver and banker. In short ale is the universal beverage.

In 1774, two years before the Declaration of Independence was signed, Robert Smith began brewing a rich, ripe, creamy ale which took the American colonies by storm. This rich October ale, which Smith named Tiger Head Brand Ale, was conceded the best of those thirteen colonies; even better than that brought from England.

Although Robert Smith died, his good work lived on as the Robert Smith Company continued to use the same formula their founder had perfected. In 1880 C. Schmidt & Sons Brewing Company, then in business 20 years and well known for beer, purchased the Robert Smith Company and continued the brewing of this ripe, golden ale, still using Robert Smith's original recipe.

Schmidt's continued using the same formula until Prohibition. During those 15 years of drought Tiger Head Ale was never forgotten. Its delicious, creamy flavor, as well as its clear golden color, lingered fondly in the memories of those who like good ale.

Last week this famous old brew had a triumphant return, being again available in pint bottles and on draught. In taprooms, restaurants, clubs and homes its golden color again delights the eye while its rich flavor soothes the palates of old friends and hosts of new ones. Uniform, fine quality and wholesome goodness is insured by Schmidt's special ale equipment, plus three generations of brewing experience and Robert Smith's 160-year-old formula.

As a companion brew, Schmidt's Tiger Head Brand Porter also returns as full of good cheer and good health as ever. This strengthening, health building tonic is especially recommended for invalids, convalescents and nursing mothers.

With the popularity that Tiger Head Brand Ale enjoyed before Prohibition, its return will be welcomed by all those who appreciate an honest ale of quality.

FOOTBALL FANS ON EDGE FOR THANKSGIVING FRAY

By Jack Orr

(H. S. Reporter)

The Morrisville Bulldogs, garbed in its best array of Blue and Gold, will be here tomorrow to clash with the mighty Junny of Bristol High.

The eleven from up the river, sponsored by an undefeated and untied record, are the favorites to capture the contest although the outcome is by no means considered a set-up.

The Cardinal and Gray, who have tasted the bitter cup of defeat but once this campaign, although tied by their Alumni and Burlington, will be upholding an important tradition themselves. In six gridiron contests with the Bulldogs the Bristol lads have won five and tied one, never being beaten by the Blue and Gold.

The no-decision fray came last year on Island Field when a barrage of passes caught the Bristol defense napping and deadlocked the count at 6-6.

The Morrisville eleven have rolled up a monstrous total of 128 points in eight contests, while the Bristol lads in nine frays have managed to garner 89 tallies.

The opponents of the Bulldog have come away with thirty-three counts while the stalwart defense of Bristol has held their rivals to nineteen points.

"SAINTS" EAGER TO WIN OVER SELLERSVILLE TEAM

St. Ann's A. A. will make a valiant effort to retain its Bucks County football championship tomorrow afternoon when the team meets the Sellersville Green Jackets on the Sellersville-Perkasie high school field.

The away-game marks the first time that the Saints have left their home field in two years. The game was arranged in this manner last season when the Green Jackets came here to play a Turkey Day game.

Coach "Socks" Seneca is a bit worried over the Sellersville men. They have been enjoying a successful season under the tutelage of Coach Tom O'Donnell who played end for Villanova last year. Reports have reached the local club that Sellersville will be well organized for this game and is out to regain the championship which it lost to the Purple and Gold last year.

Three players are on the St. Ann's injured list and they may not be available for the championship match. "Tony" Angelo, Nick Gallene and Tony DiBlassio have leg injuries, and on top of this Coach Seneca has word that his star end, "Petie" Court, will also be missing. Bud Tullio was injured last Sunday but is ready to start the Sellersville game.

On December 2, the St. Ann's team will meet the Bristol Cast-offs, a team composed of players who formerly played on St. Ann's teams of the past. This eleven is being drilled nightly by "Dom" Dougherty and is gathering a strong array of players for the game.

Tickets for this game are being sold by the American Legion Cadets who will share in the proceeds of the game. This is the third benefit game played by the Purple and Gold this season. The Cadets will also parade and drill between halves of the tilt.

IPP ENTHUSED OVER MAT CARD FOR TONIGHT

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 28—"I expect the show tonight to be the best of any that I have arranged for the Arena," said Johnny Ipp, wrestling promoter, "and I am going to New York today to look over some more of the newcomers in the game and give them a chance in Trenton."

"I am also going to talk to some of the stars and arrange for them to face the youngsters that have made good here. Unless something entirely unlooked for occurs, and I don't think anything will, I can't see how the feature bout between Emil Dusek and Abe Goldberg can fail to be the 'hot-test' match ever contested here. Both boys have everything to gain by a win and much to lose by defeat and they will battle from the start to the finish to achieve victory. It is an exceptionally important bout to both of them. The fans who have seen Emil in action know that he is just as rough and tough as his brothers, Ernie and Rudy, and I am wondering, with them, just what Goldberg will do when and if Emil unleashes a rowdy attack. The Jewish lad sure will have his hands full."

"The rest of the card is packed with dynamite in the persons of Stan So-rolls against Al Bisignano, Tony Colasano against Henry Piers and Harry Fields against Buck Olson. Colasano will surprise the fans with his speed and ability. Every bout on the card promises to be jammed with action and thrills."

While it is not unusual for a promoter to get excited over a show he is producing, Ipp has good reason to gloat over the wrestling show at the Arena tonight. He has brought together the most promising lads who have recently come to the fore in grappling circles and paired them against each other.

The first bout will start at 8:30, and that the public likes the show is indicated by the ticket sale.
